

Menstrual Cups and Discs: What to Know

Menstrual cups and menstrual discs are reusable period products that collect menstrual blood instead of absorbing it like pads or tampons. They are worn inside the body and can be a comfortable, effective option for many people.

What's the Difference?

- Menstrual cups sit in the vaginal canal and form a gentle seal to collect blood.
- Menstrual discs sit higher, at the base of the cervix, and collect blood without forming a seal.

Both come in different sizes to fit different bodies and flow levels.

Benefits of Cups and Discs

- Can be worn for up to 8–12 hours*, depending on flow
- Reusable and environmentally friendly
- May be more cost-effective over time
- Do not dry out the body like some tampons can

(*Always follow product instructions.)

Are They Safe?

Yes. When used as directed and cleaned properly, menstrual cups and discs are considered safe. As with any menstrual product, good hand hygiene and routine cleaning are important.

They may take some time to get used to, and that's okay. Everyone's comfort level is different.

Who Might Consider Them?

Menstrual cups and discs can be an option for teens and adults who:

- Want longer-lasting protection
- Are comfortable learning to use an internal product
- Are looking for reusable menstrual options

They are not required—pads, tampons, cups, and discs are all valid choices.

When to Ask for Help

A healthcare provider can help answer questions about:

- Choosing the right size or type
 - Comfort or insertion concerns
 - Whether a cup or disc is a good option for you
-

Final Message

Menstrual cups and discs are just one of many healthy period care options. The best choice is the one that feels safe, comfortable, and practical for each individual.

For questions or support, contact a trusted healthcare provider or email care@yarrow.com.